THE PACIFIC
Commercial Advertiser.
SATURDAY, MAY 12.
In a recent London publication entitled "Literary and Social Judgments," by W. R. Greg, are some thoughts well worthy of reproduction. We quote from a review of the book in the Otago (N.Z.) Witness:
In his article on British and Foreign Characteristics, Mr. Greg has dealt with the gods of the modern world—the gods of advancement, luxury, and in a word, civilisation, with so unparalyzing and severe a hand, that we are compelled at least to wonder whether after all, a railway is the sumnum bonum of national good, and the accumulation of so many millions, the one sure test of individual greatness. "We cannot," he says, "We cannot bring ourselves to regard the gallant and persevering energy which is devoted to getting on in life, as consecrated to a high end. We must persuade ourselves at once, and without enquiry, as many do, to pronounce the life that enjoys as ipso facto and per se, meaner than the life that toils. This is the key note, indeed, of several of his papers. It is, indeed, a sad spectacle, he says, in another place, "that of so vast a proportion of national energy still devoted to mere material acquisition, still labouring in a field in which such ample harvests have been already gained; still pushing on in a direction in which there is little to win, while so many social problems remain still unsolved, so many grievous wounds still unhealed, so many noble paths still unfrequented and unexplored, we still press madly forward in the race."
Though the good can present us with no new attractions, we still struggle to get through. We have got far enough to command all the substantial acquisitions and enjoyments of a worthy life; we still permit ourselves to indulge in added wealth, which can purchase for us no added happiness, and in the hot competition we push aside or trample down many who really need what we only offer. New roads, faster ships, more rapid acquisition, speedier transmission of intelligence, greater physical comforts—all these are valuable things, and objects of legitimate ambition. But of these we have now almost enough. We have pushed on long enough and far enough in this exclusive line; there are other fields to be tilled, other harvests to be reaped, other aims to be achieved. Thousands on thousands of course must, until some blessed change comes over our social state, spend in life striving for a living, and thousands more must concentrate all their exertions on the acquirement of a competence; but why should this competence be ever vanishing point; why should not those who have a fortune sufficient to supply all reasonable wants, and to guarantee them against anxious cares, pause awhile on the dusty and weary thoroughfare, and try to form a juster estimate of the
